Freedom is when a _____ can do what they want. Ever since ancient times, people have argued about what the meaning of the _____ “freedom” is. They also asked themselves if everyone should be free or just some. After all, _____ existed back then. Slaves were never free.

Philosophers and religious _____ often wonder: Can a human be free or unfree in different ways? When it comes down to God or the _____, then a human is free. One should also have the freedom to decide what's right. Or else one would only be a _____ in the hands of God. But humans are unfree in the world of mankind because they have the _____ and responsibility to take care of others.

Freedom is a common topic when it comes to _____. The idea of human rights is that people should be free. _____ means people can choose what they say, where they live, and what jobs they have, whether they believe in _____ or not and so on. But there are boundaries, for example, you can't say _____ you want. It is not allowed to insult somebody, threaten somebody with _____, or to cheat somebody. Freedom today means that people are “free from something”. The _____ can't do anything cruel or unfair to you, can't deny you everything and must protect you from _____. Many philosophers and politicians say that people must have the chance to do something. People must have enough _____ to live. Otherwise, they couldn't benefit from their freedom.
